

Dear Students ,

I hope this message finds you utterly oblivious to the fact that I too possess a life beyond the confines of the glorious university. Yes, believe it or not, I am an actual human being with interests, hobbies, and a dire need for a well-deserved break during the semester break!

Now, I understand that you might be tempted to reach out to me during this period for academic or non-academic consultations. It's only natural for you to assume that I'm eagerly waiting to answer your questions and cater to your every whim. However, let me burst that bubble for you and kindly remind you that I am not your personal on-call assistant.

While I applaud your enthusiasm and relentless dedication to burdening me with unnecessary queries, I must inform you that planning for the next semester should be your top priority right now. I implore you to exercise patience and suppress your undying desire for instant gratification until the next semester resumes. You might discover that amazing things can happen when you take a moment to breathe and think for yourselves.

In case you didn't realize, my job title doesn't include "Admin Officer Extraordinaire" who can provide you with academic calendars or course maps on demand. If you have the audacity to seek such information, I urge you to consult your department's senior students or visit the department webpage. It's a thrilling adventure that might even teach you a thing or two about independent research!

So, my dear students, please spare me the agony of having to pretend to care about your grievances, questions, or petty grade disputes during my well-deserved break. Instead, I encourage you to explore the fascinating world of self-sufficiency and problem-solving. You'll be amazed at the skills you can acquire when you detach yourselves from my omnipresent guidance.

Thank you for your anticipated understanding and cooperation. May your break be filled with riveting activities that do not involve pestering me.
